

Honey is an antibiotic!

Dating back to the earliest medical records, honey has been used as an antibiotic. Scientists believe that honey has antibacterial effects due to the fact that it contains hydrogen peroxide. Honey is also slightly acidic and has a high sugar content, both of which prevent bacterial growth.

